MARKET OVERVIEW

The Oakdale section of Johnson City is located in the center of the Greater Binghamton/ Broome County market.. Route 201, which terminates at Reynolds Road, site of the former Sears store, is the primary north-south connector across the Susquehanna River. It originates 2.5 miles to the south at the main campus of Binghamton University. The University is one of the major employers in the market and also the engine of economic growth in terms of research facilities, commercialization of technology, and economic expansion. A health sciences campus being developed in Johnson City is the home of the new School of Pharmacy and Pharmaceutical Sciences opening in 2018, followed by the relocation of the Decker School of Nursing. One thousand students, faculty and researchers will soon inhabit this campus. Adjacent to this Johnson City development is United Health Services, a growing hospital system and the County's largest employer. The Sears site is well positioned to take advantage of market-centric commercial and residential growth in the market.
